City wins Lansdowne Park appeal

Legal challenge. 'We're here for the long term,' Friends of Lansdowne president says after loss

Ontario's highest court unanimously dismissed a legal challenge for plans to redevelop Lansdowne Park, but the challengers still might petition the Supreme Court of Canada.

Friends of Lansdowne president June Creelman said the group will take a few days to consult with their lawyers before deciding whether or not to appeal to the Supreme Court.

"We're deeply disappointed by the outcome today," she said of the decision that put a second stamp of approval on the deal between the City of Ottawa and the Ottawa Sports and Entertainment Group (OSEG).

The decision on whether or not to appeal will rest on the legal advice and wishes of their lawyers at Sack Goldblatt Mitchell, whose only fees have been for what the group has been able to raise — a little under $300,000 to date, said Creelman.

Friends of Lansdowne spokesman Ian Lee said that, win or lose, the challenge made Ottawa's lawmakers more careful about pursuing sole-sourced contracts and spending public money.

"We raised the bar," he said. "I don't think municipal politicians would do again what they did three years ago."

The group is now planning to focus its efforts on getting the provincial government to change the Municipal Act to prevent cities from entering into sole-sourced development contracts such as the city's deal with OSEG, he said.

Mayor Jim Watson said the city plans to move ahead with the redevelopment and he hopes the Friends of Lansdowne will not appeal.

"We'd certainly welcome them to move forward with us," he said.

A Supreme Court appeal would cost the city about $25,000, and an additional $50,000 if the judges decide to hear the case — and the city would seek to recoup its costs from the Friends, said city solicitor Rick O'Connor.

The city has spent about $1.25 million on legal fees related to the challenge so far.

OSEG spokesperson Roger Greenberg said the decision was "an important milestone."

If all goes according to schedule, Ottawa will see football and soccer at Lansdowne Park in summer 2014, Greenberg said.

Greenberg and Watson said they are ready to move forward with a report heading to the city's finance and economic development committee meeting Tuesday, which recommends the city to tear down the coliseum building and move the horticulture building.

The Friends will take part in all of the upcoming council decisions concerning Lansdowne Park, said Creelman.

Union president says members are looking forward to a fresh start with new leadership

JOE LOFARO

OC Transpo general manager John Manconi has fired five senior managers and the secretary of his predecessor, Alain Mercier, as part of an organizational shift that cost the City of Ottawa $650,000 in severance pay.

Manconi said he assessed OC Transpo's management on how they worked toward his two priorities — customers and employees.

"In some cases, those aren't aligned or they don't have the skill sets or it's not what they believe in terms of the leadership roles," he said.

"Those people did their best given the conditions they were under."

The union was notified of the layoffs by a memo Monday.

The laid-off employees include Laurie Blackstone of transit operations, Larry Atkinson of transit-fleet maintenance, Kim Weston-Martin of transit safety and enforcement services, Vincent Patterson of business planning, and Jane Wright of customer relations.

Mercier's personal secretary, Anastasia Barrett, was also let go.

Garry Queale, president of the Amalgamated Transit Union local 279, said the layoffs were a step in the right direction.

"I think it's unfortunate to see people lose their jobs, but it's a morale boost for our members here," said Queale, adding some of the people dismissed were not well liked by his members.

Queale said he believes Manconi wants to start fresh with a new team of senior managers who will work well with the ATU membership.

Defence opts for no jury in Rwandan genocide trial

The Ottawa lawyers for a man accused of genocide have decided to forgo making history with his case and go to trial before a judge, but no jury.

Justice Michel Charbonneau sent home about 120 jurors Monday morning after the defence reversed their previous decision to defend Jacques Mungwarere in a jury trial.

It would have been the first Canadian jury to hear a genocide trial.

Mungwarere was arrested in Windsor in 2009 and charged with genocide and crimes against humanity. He was accused of involvement in massacres and rape, according to information made public in the preliminary hearing.

One of his lawyers, Marc

Nerenberg, said the problem was that there is no precedent for what kind of instructions a judge should give a jury in a genocide trial. Despite arguing over the issue last week, the defence would not have learned the judge's decision about the instructions he would give until the end of the trial.

"You don't want to find out at the end that you're wrong as to how the jury should be instructed," said Nerenberg.

The legal issue concerned how unified the jury must be in their conclusions in order to reach a verdict — for example, a jury does not typically have to agree on the truth of all the facts in the case if they all believe in the guilt of the accused, he said.

"Genocide is a complicated crime," Nerenberg said. "In genocide, where there are many different crimes lumped together under a single charge, it becomes very complicated to determine if they have to decide if he did indeed commit a particular murder or is it good enough that each jury member believes he committed some murder."

"The uncertainty made it too risky," he said.

The other advantage of going to trial by judge alone is that now it is possible to bring the trial to Rwanda if necessary, Nerenberg said.

"You can't bring a jury to Rwanda," he said.

Testimony is scheduled to begin May 28. JESSICA SMITH/METRO

Conrad Black faces battle for citizenship

From mogul to inmate to lord.
Canadian citizenship uncertain for soon-to-be-released Black.

Immigration lawyers say Conrad Black faces yet another long legal battle if he hopes to return to Canada.

The disgraced former media baron, who renounced his Canadian citizenship to become a British lord, is due to be released Friday after serving three and a half years in prison.

Black has suggested he would like to reclaim his citizenship, but immigration lawyers say that would be no easy feat.

Black's fraud and obstruction-of-justice convictions make him inadmissible for permanent residency in Canada, despite the fact he's married to a Canadian citizen, Barbara Amiel.

Banks got billions during financial crisis, report says

Federal funds. Ottawa maintains Canada's banks did not require a bailout during the 2008-09 economic crash

Canada's big banks received billions in support from the federal government and the Bank of Canada during the 2008-09 financial crisis, a report by the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives says.

"While these funds were repaid in full, it is clear that the banks benefited enormously from public financing when private funds were unavailable," wrote David Macdonald, author of the report released Monday.

"In addition, had the rapid and enormous deployment of public funds not been available, most, if not all, Canadian banks would have encountered

Finance Department

Finance Department spokesman Chisholm Pothier said the government extended financing "at competitive interest rates," not subsidies.

- The Canadian Bankers Association, which represents the country's banks, said the funding was put in place to ensure that credit was available to lend, not because the banks were in danger of going bankrupt.

serious difficulty."

The left-leaning think-tank estimated the country's largest financial institutions borrowed nearly $75 billion in short-term collateralized loans from the Bank of Canada and the U.S. Federal Reserve, peaking at $41 billion and $33 billion respectively.

The banks also sold a total of some $69 billion worth of insured mortgage-backed securities to the government, the report estimated.

The Centre for Policy Alternatives based its report on information provided by Canadian public institutions and analysis of the banks' financial reports.

The report noted that much of its work was based on estimates because the federal government and the Bank of Canada have refused requests for a detailed accounting.

"A healthy financial system cannot be based on massive government support for which the details remain secret," the report said.

Ottawa has said repeatedly that Canada has one of the soundest banking sectors in the world and the country's banks did not require a bailout during the 2008-09 financial crisis.

Competition coming

Apple tax strategy saves billions

A published report says Apple uses subsidiaries in Ireland, the Netherlands and other low-tax nations as part of a strategy that enables the technology giant to cut its global tax bill by billions of dollars every year.

The New York Times on Sunday outlined legal methods used by Cupertino, Calif.-based Apple to avoid paying billions of dollars in federal and state taxes.

One approach highlighted in the report: Even though the company is based in California, Apple has set up a small office in Reno, Nev., to collect and invest its profits. The corporate tax rate in Nevada is zero. In California, it's 8.84 per cent.

While many major corporations try to reduce their tax bills, technology companies like Apple, Google, Microsoft and others have more options to do so.

That's because some of their revenue comes from digital products or royalties on patents, which makes it easier for them to move profits to tax-friendly states or countries, the Times said.

In contrast, it's tougher to shift the collection of profits from the sale of a physical product — like groceries or a car — to a tax-friendly haven.

The 71 technology companies in the S&P 500, including Apple, Google, Yahoo and Dell, reported paying global cash taxes over the past two years at a rate that's, on average, one-third less than what other S&P 500 companies pay, the Times said.

Apple has legally allocated about 70 per cent of its profits overseas, where tax rates are often much lower than in the U.S., according to company filings.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Published report

The New York Times says Apple paid $3.3 billion in cash taxes globally on $34.2 billion in profits last year — a tax rate of 9.8 per cent.

- Apple told the Times that it has complied with all laws and accounting rules, and says that its U.S. operations generated nearly $5 billion in federal and state income taxes in the first half of fiscal 2012.

A TRIP ABROAD IS THE ULTIMATE RELATIONSHIP BAROMETER

SHE SAYS...
Jessica Napier
metronews.ca/shesays

Travelling together is an important rite of passage for all couples. And I'm not referring to the sitting-in-matching-deck-chairs-while-you-sip-mojitos-at-some-all-inclusive-resort kind of "travelling"; I'm talking about real globe-trotting.

While traversing foreign continents can mean sharing some wonderfully romantic moments together, it can also (and somehow simultaneously) be a complete and utter nightmare. Seeing the world hand-in-hand is an eye-opening experience that can bring you closer together or tear you apart.

Dating in second gear

You'll quickly learn that there is such a thing as "too much time together." You will get on each other's nerves and there won't be any means of escape.

Being together for an extended period of time requires a whole new level of intimacy. Bad habits are exposed and there's no hiding your true colours from one another. You will discover all of your sweetie's idiosyncrasies (overpacking, tardiness, disorganization, bad hygiene), and your patience will be tested to the very edge.

You'll quickly learn that there is such a thing as "too much time together." You will get on each other's nerves and there won't be any means of escape. A couple of years ago, I went on a three-week European vacation with my boyfriend. During that trip, I often found myself hiding out in the bathroom just so I could have some proper alone time.

The most important thing you should pack on any trip together — other than your passport — is a sense of humour. There will be times when you'll feel overwhelmingly hungry or sick, or tired. Things will go wrong — you'll miss a train, lose your Visa card, eat questionable seafood, break your camera — and you will have to keep going.

The most important thing for couples to remember is that you will fight; it is inevitable and unavoidable. Eventually, those "we'll laugh about this later" incidents will get to you and you'll reach your breaking point. You'll scream, cry and have a miserable sort of breakdown that makes you look like a complete crazy person.

Here's the thing: if you do all that and your partner STILL wants to sit next to you on the plane ride home, well, then you know it's meant to last.

You really don't know if you're going to be good together forever until you've seen each other at your worst. This usually happens after 18 hours in transit or in a cockroach-infested hostel in Southeast Asia. So taking your relations on the road — whether by car, bus, train, plane or boat — can be an excellent compatibility test.

State of honeybees up in the air

A bee works on collecting nectar from a fruit tree in West Bath, Maine, Monday. A state bee expert says conditions are perfect for another honeybee die-off. A mild winter and unseasonably warm early spring have created conditions reminiscent of 2010, when an explosion in the mite populations killed off many colonies.

On Canadian soil

Population has depleted recently

The health of the bee population in Canada has been a concern in recent years due to the infestation of mites. In the last seven years or so, the over-winter loss rate of hives has fluctuated between 20 and 30 per cent. Before that, it was generally five to a maximum of 15 per cent. There is also a worry the mites will become resistant to the products used to treat them.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

So far, so good

- This year in Canada is so far, so good. Although it's still early in the season, anecdotal reports from beekeepers and provincial apiarists across the country indicate this spring the survival rate for bees in Canada seems to be fairly good.
- It could be because beekeepers are addressing the mite problem better than they have in the past and it could be a function of the mild winter across much of the nation.

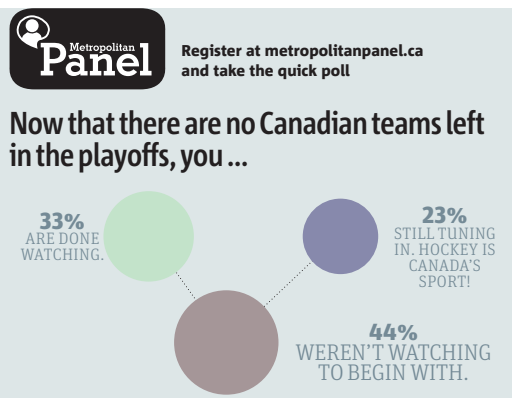

On the map

5th

Canada is the fifth-largest honey producer in the world, with about 7,000 beekeepers operating a total of 600,000 honeybee colonies, says Rod Scarlett, executive director of the Canadian Honey Council, based in Sherwood Park, Alta.

When the model and TV actress first heard that Skyfall auditions were to be held Paris, she became obsessed. "I sent my reel to anyone on Facebook related to the movie," Bérénice Marlohe recalls.

But after the casting director got in touch and she found herself testing scenes with Daniel Craig and Sam Mendes, the pressure hit home.

"There were moments when I felt scared and trapped by this huge concept of Bond girl", the 32-year-old admits. Marlohe's first passions were art and the piano, and as a self-confessed "paranoid" — starring in a $150 million

The 32-year-old was helped in her role as the mysterious Severine by studying Famke Janssen's dominatrix Xenia Onatopp in GoldenEye. "It's so original to have a character who kills and has an orgasm at the same time, that's what we go to movies for."

In the end, a sense of responsibility pacified Marlohe. Were M.J. and Whitney an item?

Michael Jackson's former bodyguard claims the late King of Pop had an affair with Whitney Houston in 1991 — and even wanted to marry the late singer.

"Whitney practically moved into Michael's ranch and they had a fling like any other young couple," Matt Fiddes tells the Sun. "Michael said later he had always hoped the relationship had gone further, and I know he dreamed of marrying her." Fiddes says the pair had one more run-in at a 2001 tribute concert for Jackson. "They were both a mess, to be honest," Fiddes says of the reunion. "They shared what would be their final hugs and Michael begged Whitney to get off the drugs that were destroying her life." Keeping up with E!

According to a source at Us Weekly, "Khloe Kardashian has pulled the plug," on her E! spin-off series Khloe and Lamar. The reason, according to TMZ.com, is that Lamar Odom wants to focus on reviving his faltering NBA career.

However, Kardashian's publicist tells Entertainment Weekly: "The show has not been cancelled. It will depend on their schedules as Lamar's basketball schedule is a priority."

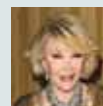

If the series doesn't return for a third season, at least there's another reality TV show about the trials and tribulations of young married life hitting the network. Married to Jonas, starring Kevin Jonas and his wife, Danielle, will follow the couple as they navigate their daily lives at their New Jersey home while juggling his recording and touring schedule and various sets of in-laws.

Here's an idea, E!: Have Khloe and Lamar move next door to the Jonases, get Lamar on the (now Brooklyn) Nets with Kim Kardashian ex Kris Humphries, and create the most beautiful reality TV mash-up in the world. You can thank (and pay) me later.

Grey's Anatomy star Patrick Dempsey played a real-life hero when a teenager's car flipped over onto the yard of his Malibu home, according to People magazine. Dempsey used a crowbar and fire extinguisher to pull the 17-year-old driver, Weston Masset, to safety. "I was scared for my life. I was upside down," Masset says. "He was there for me. It would have been a lot worse without him." The teen admits he was a bit caught off-guard when he was pulled from the car and saw Dempsey standing over him. Masset remembers asking, "Are you famous?" to which Dempsey reportedly replied, "Yeah, I'm a doctor."

Rubik's Cube

40 years of frustration

It's a puzzle, a metaphor and a hit toy — and in a couple of years, the Rubik's Cube will be a museum exhibition in celebration of its 40th anniversary. The toy's creator, Erno Rubik, 67, was being honoured at a gala at the Liberty Science Center in Jersey City. He has travelled from his native Budapest, to help develop the exhibit, which will open in April 2014. The exhibit is scheduled to travel for seven years to design science museums around the world. Rubik was an architect teaching a class at the Budapest College of Applied Arts in 1974 when he decided to build a cube to teach students about 3D space. He soon realized it could become a hit toy when students and fellow teachers couldn't put it down.

It's time to talk.

Experts are trying to get people discussing the issue of not being able to have children

ROMINA MCGUINNESS
Metro World News

A house. A car. A career. A spouse and 2.5 kids. Should you choose to live conventionally, you probably spend your days in pursuit of all of the above. Most are within your control. If you want a car, you save and buy one. If you want a spouse, you have a drink, and then meet friends of friends. But the 2.5 kids — what happens if your body can't produce a child?

Infertility is something you don't hear a lot about, among people in their 20s, but experts are aiming to get more people accepting of the issue.

Barbara Collura, Executive Director of RESOLVE: The U.S. National Infertility Association, says there's a stigma and shame attached to infertility that's prevented it from being discussed properly.

"Anyone in the AIDS world will tell you how 25 years ago people thought it was contagious — now, everyone speaks about it," she says. "But with infertility, we haven't gotten to the point where people are ready to open up." Until society normalizes infertility, don't expect to see people running marathons shouting "woo hoo! I'm infertile!"

So why is infertility such a sensitive subject? One reason is because it revolves around sex.

"The moment someone finds out they can't reproduce, they feel let down by their body. The way they see it is that it's not performing the way it 'should' be," explains Collura, who also believes that getting people talking about their reproductive system the way they do about sex is the only way to increase public awareness.

Giuliana Rancic, the 37-year-old E! News presenter and reality star, is one of the rare celebrities to have opened up about her battle with infertility. Rancic and husband Bill's journey into parenthood and attempt at IVF (in vitro fertilization) was aired on their reality TV show Giuliana and Bill and watched by millions of people worldwide.

The show took a dramatic twist when Rancic was diagnosed with breast cancer, further jeopardizing her chances of becoming a mother.

"For some of the women in their twenties and thirties watching Rancic's show, it was the first they had ever heard about infertility — and the only place they had heard about it," says Collura. "This is not where we want people to be getting this sort of information, but at least they're getting something."

So where else should those afflicted go for information? Facebook, Twitter, blogs like The Infertility Voice, whose founder wrote the column on this page. Social media often allows you to be anonymous.

"You could be in the place where you are willing to share your story but not your name," says Collura.

Either way, it's the conversation that's important.

How to ... deal with infertility

There are lots of ways to deal with the stress associated with infertility. Here are just a few:

If you're feeling sad

The endless waiting and hoping has left you feeling irritable, lethargic and extremely sad. Write down a list of all the good things you do have in your life. This will help you visualize your strengths and forget your weaknesses.

If you're feeling angry

The fact you can't get pregnant makes you feel helpless and vulnerable. Don't let this anger consume you. Aerobic exercise such as running or swimming can help relieve some of the accumulated tension. Relaxation techniques such as yoga can also help you clear your mind.

By the numbers

In 2010, 47.7 per cent of women fell pregnant after IVF cycles — 41.7 percent of these resulted in live births. (Figures based on fresh embryos from non-donor oocytes.) The only treatment tracked is the number of IVF (in vitro fertilization) cycles — ironically — it is the least popular.

If you're feeling guilty

If repeated attempts at pregnancy have been unsuccessful, you may start to believe that what's happening to you is your fault.

It's hard to accept that your body is out of your control. Acceptance is the only way to realize you're not a failure and that you can't go on blaming yourself for something you didn't do.

This is one schnitzel lunch that most certainly works

German Jäger Schnitzel ($8.99). SHARI GOODMAN

LUNCH RUSH
Shari Goodman

Schnitzel Works is a gem located in an industrial park with a car wash, a dealership and the now closed Direct Buy as neighbours. Inside, the walls are brilliantly painted, the tables are quickly cleaned, and the windows make it bright even on a dull day.

A variety of schnitzel options inspired by different countries await our decision. The waitress tells us that women tend to choose the lighter ones (Austrian with its simple squeeze of lemon) and men choose the heavier ones (Canadian with bacon and cheddar).

Not wanting to fit into the stereotype and seeking out the mushroom option, I choose the German Jäger Schnitzel.

In no time our lunches arrive. A large thin, just-fried pork schnitzel laid on a fresh white bun, topped with lettuce, a tomato slice, thick dill pickle and the large sliced mushrooms with sauce. Is it fork fare or sandwich? I choose fork.

The verdict? It was substantial and almost too big for one person. The only complaint: not enough salt.

This recipe serves eight. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients

- 500 g (1 lb) fresh thick asparagus
- 30 to 60 ml (2 to 4 tbsp) extra-virgin olive oil
- 1 ml (1/4 tsp) kosher salt (optional)
- 250 g (1/2 lb) thinly sliced prosciutto

bag until ready to cook.

3. Place asparagus over medium heat on grill crosswise so they won't fall through. Grill for 8 to 12 minutes (depending on size and thickness of stalks), turning occasionally to expose all sides to the heat. The asparagus should begin to brown in spots (indicating that its natural sugars are caramelizing) but should not be allowed to char.

4. Remove from grill and let cool to room temperature. Wrap each stalk of grilled asparagus with a thin piece of prosciutto. Serve immediately.

Did you know that by simply seasoning asparagus with olive oil, salt and pepper before grilling you'll totally transform it?

Most people don't realize what a powerful flavour enhancer the heat of the grill is. And this simple recipe for Prosciutto-Wrapped Asparagus really shows just how capable it is.

It works because the high heat of the grill causes the natural sugars in the asparagus to caramelize, accentuating its nutty, sweet flavours.

Though asparagus is available all year long, it's a sure sign that spring is here when the local asparagus begins to arrive at the grocer. Choose thick-bottomed stalks that snap instead of bend with tight tips and a plump green look to them.

1. Trim off tough bottoms of asparagus spears. Wash and dry the spears.

2. Place asparagus in a large resealable plastic bag. Add enough oil to allow you to massage the spears and coat them entirely with olive oil. Sprinkle with salt, if using, and massage again. Leave asparagus in the

Pets. People choose dogs based on looks and cats based on interaction: Study

GARRISON
Metro New York

As pet owners, we share a special bond with our cats or dogs, who often take on the roll of a four-legged family member within our homes. Now, a new study has shed light on the mental process that takes place when people choose those beloved pets.

According to an ASPCA study reported by the Wall Street Journal, the reason that people settle on a particular dog is rather superficial, really. The lyrics of a favourite children's song prove to ring true:

How much is that doggie in the window? (arf! arf!)/The one with the waggly tail.

That's right, it's all about looks for 76.8 per cent of people when they're picking out a cute, rambunctious puppy, and 78.3 per cent of adopters when picking out an adult dog.

When it comes to picking out a cat, though, people tend to look more within. The study shows 77.9 per cent of adopters said how a cat interacts with people is the deciding factor on choosing it — probably because they all look the same anyway (full disclosure: we are dog people here at Metro). It's also the most important factor for 69.3 per cent of people picking out a kitten.

The study was particularly important for the ASPCA because it provided insight into how people select pets that are up for adoption.

Sure, it's easy to settle on a cute, clean puppy or a frisky kitten — but many animals that wind up in shelters have had a rough life on the streets or have suffered abuse, causing dogs to sometimes lack that freshly groomed look or cats to shy away from people.

A person's tendency to choose interactive pets was especially evident when adopters answered the question, "What did this pet do when you first met him/her?"

Sounds like picking out a pet is almost like picking out a dating partner.

Pseudoscience

- If someone adopts a pet, they're probably a pretty nice person, right? A new study says niceness (and meanness) might be in the genes.
- On that note, nice people probably have a more positive outlook, which could be good for your heart, according to research.

Tips to ensure a 'child-free' wedding

Hello Charles the Butler! I'm really hoping you can help. My niece & her fiancé are trying to figure out how to create their wedding invitations, making the "no children" very clear. I was thinking that if the invitation is addressed to only "John and Jane" with the reply card also only having their names on it, that might suffice. They are worried that some in the family will still not get it. Do they write "adults only please" right on the invitation? We appreciate any advice that you can provide. Thank you, Sydney

Hello Sydney,

I just dealt with this question for my dear friend Julie who is getting married in July.

1. You are correct in that the envelope should only be addressed with the names of who is invited to the event.

2. The reply card should be left blank for people to write the names in themselves. Why? Because this will help as most people thinking of bringing their children would likely write their names too, so that they are included for dinner, and this method will allow you to catch this early.

3. Finally make sure all family members like parents, brothers, sisters, wedding party, etc., know you want an adult-only party and so they can bring this up in conversation with those who have children. They can say, "So have you organized your child care for the wedding yet?" or "I bet you're looking forward to a nice adult evening at John and Jane's wedding!"

I believe this is the best approach. Now what to do if someone shows up with children in tow despite all of the above?

As grumpy and disappointed as you have every right to be, remember that these are your guests — just be gracious and get through the event. Starting a fight or mentioning how this is "adults only" will inflame the situation and cause a scene, which is the last thing you want!

Good Luck to the couple.

Afraid of higher interest rates? See it as an opportunity to tackle your debt

Strategy. If you're dealing with debt, here's how to prepare yourself for the Bank of Canada's looming interest rate hikes

YOUR MONEY
Alison Griffiths
money@metronews.ca

What every consumer has been waiting for — and either dreading or celebrating — has finally happened. Mark Carney, Governor of the Bank of Canada, has flung open the door on interest rate hikes.

A rate increase, on its own, would also strengthen the loonie. Just witness what happened last week when Carney simply ruminated on higher interest rates — the loonie promptly shot up a cent.

And that's not desirable for most Canadian businesses, especially manufacturers.

However, Carney is clearly thinking about some kind of intervention such as quantitative easing (a.k.a. printing money) to devalue the dollar, allowing him to boost rates and cool the ferocious record borrowing of Canadians.

Since we might face a raise in rates as early as the fall and almost certainly by the end of the year, everyone with debt should embark on a protective strategy.

Live the increase

Among the most vulnerable to the interest rate hikes are those with large personal or home equity lines of credit. Those rates will rise in tandem with the prime rate.

Use an online calculator and add half to three-quarters of a per cent to your LOC rate. Then pay the higher monthly amount.

If rates don't rise you're ahead. If they do you are prepared. And if you can't make the extra payment you need to re-visit your budget and find something to cut.

Boost e-savings

In a higher interest rate environment, the last thing you want to face is an unexpected expense and be forced to pay it with a credit card.

Emergency savings are

Are you prepared?

- Thirty-three per cent of Canadians have one to three months of living expenses saved for emergencies, according to a 2012 TD Canada Trust survey.

critical, especially for families. Even setting aside an extra $50 each month will help.

Delay spending

Whether it's a new smartphone, e-reader, car or wardrobe you hanker for, put off all unnecessary expenses — especially if you have non-mortgage debt hanging around.

It's easy to cloak our wants as needs, so delay spending on those non-essential items.

Consider your mortgage

Rising rates send many homeowners scurrying to switch from variable to fixed.

But there's no hurry. Rates have to jump by the difference between variable and fixed before you are actually paying more.

Among those most vulnerable to interest rate hikes are those with large lines of credit. ISTOCK IMAGES

FUN AND FRUGAL
Leslie Scorgie

@Lesliescorgie on Twitter

I recently sold my house and have decided to get a new mortgage through a mortgage broker rather than my bank.

So, I met with my bank last week to discuss the transaction and learned that the cost to break my existing mortgage is nearly $5,000!

Hogwash! For $5,000 I could take a three-week European vacation or contribute the annual maximum amount to my tax-free savings account.

Mortgage prepayment charges are the costs to "break" your existing fixed-rate mortgage contract.

They exist because the lender has to borrow the funds needed for the mortgage from the market. When a borrower "breaks" a mortgage, the lender is charged a "breakage cost," which is passed along to the borrower to offset the cost that the lender is charged.

Should you switch?

Take emotion out of the equation and let math dictate the decision.

Prepayment charges are typically calculated based on the greater of three months interest penalty or interest for the remainder of the term on the amount prepaid calculated using the interest rate differential.

The interest rate differential is the difference in the interest payable on your existing mortgage versus that payable on a replacement mortgage, calculated on the time remaining in your existing mortgage term.

To determine whether it's worth switching lenders, I've followed these steps:

1) Take emotion out of the equation and let math dictate the decision.

2) Evaluate whether the new lender has a more attractive interest rate, term and flexible repayment schedule (such as accelerated payments, double-up payments or annual lump sum contributions up to 10 per cent).

3) Using a free online banking mortgage calculator (available at any major bank or mortgage website), calculate the break-even rate needed to make it worth switching.

4) Confirm with the existing lender, by phone or in person, the exact fee. Present this information to the new lender and begin negotiating for either the fee to be lowered or to have the new lender pick up part of the tab.

Switching mortgage lenders only makes financial sense when a borrower can save money.

In my case, I'll save thousands of dollars (over the lifetime of the new mortgage) by making the switch, but I still have more negotiating to do before I can pull the pin on my existing mortgage.

THE HOCKEY NEWS

ottawa@metronews.ca

The Senators' 2011-12 joy ride may be over, but there's still drama to be monitored off the ice. Here is some of what lies ahead in the summer months:

Will he or won't he? After incurring a concussion in the playoffs — his second in six months — Daniel Alfredsson is contemplating retirement. The Senators legend notched 27 goals after off-season back surgery, earning him a Bill Masterton Trophy nomination for his dedication and perseverance. Alfredsson, 39, has accepted an invitation to play for Sweden at the world championship. Hopefully for Sens fans, this is a sign Alfie has plenty left in the tank.

Restricted free agents. According to Erik Karlsson, contract negotiations should be easy. The only question is does the Norris Trophy nominee receive $6 or $7 million per year? Nick Foligno and an improved Jim O'Brien will be re-upped. Kaspars Daugavins may have to accept a two-way offer. However, there is uncertainty surrounding Peter Regin. Does the club extend a qualifying offer to a player who is still recovering from season-ending shoulder surgery. With all four centre positions filled, is there room for the Great Dane?

Who stays, who goes?

Planning to return?

"Alfredsson has accepted an invitation to play for Sweden at the world championship. Hopefully for Sens fans, this is a sign Alfie has plenty left in the tank."

The Senators have several unrestricted free agents. Alex Auld and Matt Gilroy will most certainly be searching for new addresses. GM Bryan Murray has to make decisions regarding Matt Carkner, Zenon Konopka, Filip Kuba and Jesse Winchester. Carkner and Konopka will have to accept reduced roles if they wish to remain teammates. Kuba did not have a solid post-season, but he is Karlsson's partner. It will be interesting to see if an offer is forthcoming to the Czech native. Winchester suffered his second concussion of the season in Game 5 and his situation is tenuous.

Wants? Murray expressed a desire to acquire a defensive defenceman and a 25-30 goal-scoring forward. Local product Mark Borowiecki may fill the bill on the back end and a challenge has been issued to Foligno to be that forward, but look to the Senators to go outside the organization to fill these needs.

And let's not forget hotshot prospects Jakob Silfverberg, Mark Stone and Mika Zibanejad will all be vying for roster spots in September.

At the locker cleanout, Foligno said he would like next season to start "in a couple of weeks." There's an entire pumped-up fanbase that would echo that sentiment.

Alfredsson to suit up for Sweden

Daniel Alfredsson's season isn't over just yet.

The Senators captain will play for Sweden at the world hockey championship, according to the IIHF.

It will be Alfredsson's first trip to the tournament since 2005. The event is being co-hosted by Sweden and Finland, giving the 39-year-old a chance to play on home ice. Sweden opens the event on Friday against Norway in Stockholm.

"The rights probably outnumber the wrongs 20 to one, so I'm going to focus on what went right for us."

Eugene Melnyk, Ottawa Senators owner

Eugene Melnyk was still pondering what might have been but was just as excited to think about what might be ahead.

"Some people say that time heals all wounds, but that Game 7 loss still stings and almost reminds me of 2007," the Senators' owner said Monday via conference call, referring to when Ottawa lost in the Stanley Cup final to Anaheim. "It's something you won't forget for quite a long time, but it happened and we move on."

Melnyk's words were his first publicly since the New York Rangers beat Ottawa 2-1 on Thursday in Game 7 of their first-round series.

Melnyk felt the season was a success and pointed out that many predicted the Sens wouldn't make the playoffs.

"There were very few expectations that we would get to

"We are in the very first year of a rebuild and let's call it what it is and it's a rebuild year."

In addition to the team's playoff run, Melnyk pointed to other highlights, including Daniel Alfredsson scoring his 400th goal, Chris Phillips playing in his 1,000th game, the evolution of Erik Karlsson and Ottawa hosting a successful all-star game. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Nets' new home. Barclays Center owner hopes for NHL hockey too

The developer and owner of Brooklyn's new Center believes his state-of-the-art facility can hold hockey for more than just a passing game or two.

Bruce Ratner, who will welcome the NBA's Nets to Brooklyn next season, is hopeful of the arena's potential NHL prospects as well, perhaps even the New York Islanders, who are looking for a new home. In fact, the building already has ice and locker rooms for both sports.

Barclays Center "was made for hockey and basketball," Ratner said. "It could easily support a hockey team."

Ratner was in attendance Monday at the unveiling of the Brooklyn Nets' logo, along with CEO Brett Yormark, general manager Billy King, coach Avery Johnson, and centre Brook Lopez of the Nets, as well as NBA deputy commissioner Adam Silver.

"It holds 14,500 for hockey," Ratner said.

The Islanders' lease at Nassau Veterans Memorial Coliseum in Uniondale expires following the 2014-15 season.

Team owner Charles Wang and NHL commissioner Gary Bettman have been adamant that the Islanders will not play in the Coliseum after that point, although both have reiterated their desire to keep the Islanders in the New York City area.

NBA. Bulls believe they can go far without Rose

One bad landing finished Derrick Rose's season. The Chicago Bulls insist it hasn't dashed their NBA title hopes.

With their superstar point guard out for the rest of the season with a left knee injury, the Bulls will try to take a 2-0 lead over the Philadelphia 76ers when their first-round playoff series resumes Tuesday night after realizing their worst nightmare in the opener.

There was Rose writhing in pain with just over a minute left after tearing the anterior cruciate ligament. Now, the Bulls will have to

"I've watched them respond to every challenge all year long," coach Tom Thibodeau said. "This is the next one."
